

Vision

The Center for Advanced Study, as a unique venue for scholars and intellectuals from Southeast Europe (SEE) and internationally, aims at providing constructive contributions to advanced studies of the social sciences and humanities (SSH) from the SEE perspective, by opening opportunities and space for independent scholarly and intellectual thinking and debates. CAS is committed to pursuing new lines of thought and to broaching often contested topics of social relevance for SEE and wider. There is a pressing need for critical discussion and reflection of relevant regional and global phenomena involving scholars, intellectuals, practitioners and society at large, in order to move the region towards full integration into broader European and global scientific and intellectual space.

In response to these contextual challenges, the Center strives to create space for scholars and intellectuals to gather, dialogue, collaborate and offer their contribution to the world wide academic arena, with the ultimate goal of rebuilding SEE's social and scientific ties with leading global intellectual and scholarly centers. The mission of the Center is to provide the freedom of research and intellectual thinking, to strengthen transnational and regional scientific collaboration and joint work on current discourses in SSH. In collaboration with leading IAS in and outside Europe, the Center is committed to fostering space for research on a range of topics of social relevance, while at the same time aiming at improving the quality of scientific institutions in the region by supporting young talented scholars and emphasizing the strategy of "brain gain". The Center will identify prospective young scholars from Southeast Europe working abroad and in the region and help them to (re)connect to global scholarly trends by providing support and infrastructure for conducting independent research projects.

Directors

PETAR BOJANIĆ is the director of the Centre for Ethics, Law and Applied Philosophy, as well as the Institute for Philosophy and Social Theory (Belgrade). Currently, he is working on issues of social ontology, ethics of war and various projects surrounding Jewish political thought.

The possibility of thinking and constructing projects together, of discussion and functioning as a compact intellectual group across a large and diverse space, spanning from northern Italy to Turkey – this is the idea that has launched the Center for Advanced Studies. With a dawning spirit of fellowship, accompanied by a desire for better understanding and more effective cooperation, we have undertaken the present venture.

PROF. SNJEŽANA PRIJIĆ-SAMARŽIJA is currently the vice rector at the University of Rijeka. She is a full professor at the Department of Philosophy, Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences. She was the Director of Rijeka University Foundation and director of several courses and conferences at the International University Centre Dubrovnik. The main areas of her academic interest and publications are social philosophy, epistemology and applied ethics.

There are a number of barriers in the inter-nationalization and intellectual collaboration of research in Southeast Europe. Some of these have their roots in money and politics, others in disciplinary methods, technical conditions, or institutional structures, even in historical and inter-cultural understanding. In this respect, CAS strives to break down and to overcome obstacles and borders. Our mission in CAS is to promote the recognition of the role of humanities and social sciences through achieving international excellence, to encourage and maximize the benefit from visiting scholars and fellowships for all members of the academic community, and to be a creative cultural resource for the broader professional and business world and the community at large.

DR. VEDRAN DŽIHĆ is currently a Senior Fellow at the Austrian Institute for International Affairs, Non-Resident Senior Fellow at the Center for Transatlantic Relations, School of Advanced International Studies, Johns Hopkins University, Washington D.C., and a lecturer at the University of Vienna and various universities in the Western Balkans (Sarajevo, Zagreb, Belgrade).

Open and inspiring intellectual collaboration and free exchange of ideas and independent research on relevant issues is the backbone of modern societies. Humanities and social sciences in Southeastern Europe, after decades of strong political and ideological constraints and often self-inflicted deadlocks, are in urgent need for revitalization and opening towards global standards. CAS is the first institute of advanced studies on the territory of former Yugoslavia. To establish something new and produce a vision to become a publicly relevant hub for research, thought and global cooperation really is an extraordinarily challenging task. Taking up the challenge with all the international and regional support and so many enthusiasts assembled around CAS sparks new energies and makes me believe that fulfilling CAS's vision is possible.

REALIZING THE VISION: THE CAS POOL OF FELLOWS AND INTELLECTUALS

a] FELLOWSHIPS

In order to better reach its aims and realize its research projects, CAS a) invites young scholars to take up Junior Fellowship positions with CAS and b) selects a range of Senior Fellows each year. Annual calls for junior and senior fellowships are organized along two thematic foci, which cover the Research Programs. The governance boards and CAS management agree upon these thematic foci by consensus.

In addition to junior and senior fellows, CAS – with the help of the Academic Advisory Board and the advice of the Board of Patrons – invite Distinguished Fellows based on their outstanding intellectual and scholarly achievements. Distinguished Fellows freely choose their research projects and thus significantly contribute to creating an intellectually stimulating atmosphere for all academics linked with CAS. By inviting Outstanding Artists and Thinkers, CAS completes its pool of intellectuals working towards impacting and advancing public discourses on socially relevant topics in the region and worldwide.

CAS-SEE, Rijeka will ensure full access to necessary equipment for fellows, while its satellite offices are also tasked with providing favorable working conditions for fellows in residence. CAS and its satellite offices ensure access to library resources and all pertinent local and regional scientific and networking events.

b] SELECTION PROCEDURE

In selecting its fellows, CAS places no restrictions on country of origin, discipline, or academic position. The Academic Advisory Council makes the selection of fellows. The managing team enforce a “no loss – no gain” stipend policy for the invited Fellows.

Inaugural distinguished fellows accompany the Centre’s first phase of development. The task of these distinguished fellows is to promote and to publicly disseminate ideas and values linked to the vision of the Centre. In this capacity as ‘facilitators’, the distinguished fellows are called upon to initiate debates on issues pertinent for research on Southeast Europe, and thus weave discursive nets that are able to cushion the Centre’s subsequent work.

The members of the Academic Advisory Board will select the Fellows in a highly competitive and independent fashion, and on the basis of recommendations made by anonymous peer-reviewers. The Academic Advisory Board then proposes to the Directors their shortlist of Fellows.

INTERNATIONAL AND REGIONAL COOPERATION

Southeast Europe (SEE) has undergone over twenty years of isolation. This resulted in introverted political and social processes, leading societies and their scholars to “self-exclude” from international and transnational scholarly networks and progress. CAS is committed to providing an enabling space for exchange between scholars from the region and worldwide in order to rebuild links, strengthen networks and encourage independent thinking involving regional and international scholars and intellectuals. CAS hopes, thereby, to not only improve the quality of scientific structures in the region, but also promote the strategy of “brain gain”. In order to reach those strategic goals, the Centre will work towards a) becoming a full member of the Network of European Centres for Advanced Studies (NetIAS/EURIAS) and b) develop regional partnerships (including setting up satellite offices) at academic institutions around SEE. Both regional and international networking activities are expected to create a vibrant and active pool of scholars and intellectuals gathered around a variety of topics. Through these regional and international networking activities, the Centre will promote its values and vision of an open society and ensure buy-in from different actors in academia, the donor community and governments.

a) INTERNATIONAL COOPERATION

CAS aims to become a full member of EURIAS/NETIAS. In particular, its conceptual framework and goals, its structures, and its scientific outlook are designed to fulfill the network’s criteria for full membership status:

- Independent institution (governance, administration, selections of fellows);
- Commitment to recruiting fellows based on individual scientific excellence;
- Building up momentum for international, regional and pluridisciplinary learning;

Defining the minimum size of the institution:

- from 10 to 20 fellows,
- duration of fellowships (from 1 to 12 months),
- annual minimum of 120-140 fellow months funded,
- Financial sustainability;
- Focus on Humanities and Social Sciences;
- Openness to Life and Exact Sciences;
- Interdisciplinary approach.

Through a series of international conferences and workshops, relevant international actors and institutions such as the NETIAS/EURIAS, donors and other interested parties will be actively involved in the activities of CAS. This will enable CAS to extend its network and align its work to European standards. As a first concrete step, the CAS managing team has already started networking and dialoguing with European institutes for advanced study. Beside the Institut für die Wissenschaften von Menschen IWM in Vienna, with which concrete collaborative activities (conferences, publications) have already been planned for 2013, other institutes assembled around the EURIAS network (such as WIKO Wissenschaftskolleg in Berlin, Institut d'Etudes Avancées de Nantes, Institute for Advanced Study Paris, SCAS Swedish Collegium for Advanced Study, NIAS Netherlands Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities & Social Sciences, etc.) are ready to provide advice on how to avoid mistakes and time-consuming trial-and-error-circles in the first phase of CAS' existence.

b REGIONAL COOPERATION

At the heart of CAS' vision stands regional cooperation. Since CAS aims to become a regional academic and intellectual centre that connects and nurtures scientific, academic, intellectual, and policy activities across the region, regional cooperation through a range of scientific meetings, conferences and other events, as well as establishing satellite offices at partner institutions are of crucial importance. Entering strong partnerships and institutional ties with scientific centres in Rijeka, Istanbul, Ljubljana, Maribor, Novi Sad, Podgorica, Pristina, Belgrade, Sarajevo, Skopje, Tirana, and Zagreb will foster exchange on a regular basis. These partner organizations are invited to found "satellite offices", which will administer these exchanges with the CAS coordinating body in Rijeka, strengthen the regional network, and provide infrastructure, resources and support to resident CAS Fellows. To ensure a sustainable and functional relationship within the CAS regional network, a Memorandum of Understanding is signed between the Centre and the respective host partner institution (i.e. the "satellite office"), stipulating the mutual obligations and rights. As a next step in bolstering its regional network, CAS will organize at least one regional conference in each country in SEE.

VISIBILITY: PUBLISHING ACTIVITIES AND PUBLIC EVENTS

Publishing activities will be a significant part of CAS' work. As a follow up to the regional and international events, CAS will publish articles and works of scholars involved in its activities in English, as well as in the regional languages. CAS envisages publishing a series of CAS books in one of the renowned international publishing houses (in English), as well as setting up an independent (peer-reviewed) academic journal. Internet publishing and other resources will accompany books – as a refreshing, easily accessible, low cost and transparent way to promote CAS' work and the work of scholars attached to it. CAS will design an interactive website, where scholars and readers will be able to post comments, exchange thoughts and new ideas. In an age of increasing relevance of digital communication, the website will enable open and transparent debates on important topics and issues. The CAS webpage will be an important tool for promoting the Centre, informing the public about on-going activities and potential fellows about the work of the Centre.

CAS will organize one main conference a year to provide a permanent platform for exchange and visibility of its research. Apart from this, it will organize regional meetings in each country of the SEE, and jointly work together with partner institutions to draw up various smaller panels, discussions, and seminars, as necessity and opportunity arise.

New Challenges for Democracy – Exploring the Crisis of Trust and Democratic Legitimacy in Europe

INAUGURAL CONFERENCE of the CENTER FOR ADVANCED STUDIES – SOUTHEAST EUROPE

University of Rijeka, October 16 – 18, 2013

*Organized by CAS and University in Rijeka in cooperation with the Ministry of Science, Education and Sports of the Republic of Croatia, European Fund for the Balkans, Open Society Fund, Erste Stiftung, German Marshall Fund and European Forum Alpbach
With the institutional support of NetIAS*

In the last few years we have been increasingly confronted with crisis symptoms of democracy. The trust in political representatives and institutions is decreasing, while populism and nationalism are on rise. The economic hardships with which the world is confronted have challenged the notion of deregulated market economies and social welfare. Neoliberal policies go hand in hand with enormous power of multinational corporations and financial markets. At the same time, inequalities in the West seem to endanger the stability and legitimacy of the democratic order. As we live in fluid times, democracy has also become a fluid concept. Democratic legitimacy is contested. Deprived populations occupy the streets, new social movements demand more transparency in politics and the economy, and requests for a more direct form of participation are formulated.

All these issues are more than relevant for Southeast Europe, a region flanked by the struggling Greece and more powerful Turkey on one side, and which includes the countries of Bosnia, Kosovo, Macedonia, Montenegro and Serbia that are confronted with major political and economic challenges while trying to advance in the process of EU integration, Croatia, which has become EU's latest member in July 2013, and Slovenia. In all these countries we are witnessing multi-faceted reflections of the global phenomena mentioned above. It is time to reflect on global phenomena from a regional perspective and vice versa. A new common perspective on the future of democracy is needed.

The inaugural CAS conference gathers leading global and European scholars and intellectuals to discuss the new challenges to democracy in Europe and in its southeastern part. The newly established CAS and the University of Rijeka hosts the three-day conference, organized under the auspices of the President of the Republic of Croatia, Ivo Josipović. The inaugural CAS conference features several prominent speakers from Europe and the US. It also presents the first CAS distinguished fellows.
